Contributors

Contributors

Jennifer Brady, University of Minnesota Duluth
Jennifer Brady is Associate Professor of Spanish and Head of the Department of World Languages and Cultures at UMD where she teaches a variety of Spanish language, literature, culture, and LSP courses. She publishes on contemporary literary and cinematographic works from Spain as well as innovative models of cultural affairs, placemaking, and creative resistance.

Jim Davie, Independent Researcher
Dr. Jim Davie pursued an academic career as a researcher and lecturer in Russian at the University of Portsmouth (1993-98) before moving on to work in the UK civil service. He has written his article as an independent researcher. His most recent publication is Slang Across Societies (Routledge 2018).

Thomas A. Hanson, Butler University
Thomas A. Hanson, PhD., CFA, is an assistant professor of finance at the Lacy School of Business at Butler University. His research interests also include quantitative research methods, financial literacy, and the effects of language, translation, and interpreting on financial markets. He is the coauthor of Quantitative Research Methods in Translation and Interpreting Studies (Routledge) with Christopher D. Mellinger.

Christiane OHIN-TRAORÉ, Women In Logistics-Africa (WILA)
Christiane OHIN-TRAORÉ is an experienced leader in the African logistics sector. She has worked for over 13 years with multinational companies such as Groupe Bolloré and A.P. Moller in West and Central Africa. Formerly Commercial Director at Packing Service International, Christiane is very concerned with women's leadership issues. She therefore founded in 2021, the non-profit association Women In Logistics-Africa (WILA) to promote female leadership in a male-dominated industry.

Richard M. Robin, The George Washington University
Richard Robin has taught Russian since 1971. His main interests lie in listening comprehension, language assessment, and the Russian media. He has authored or coauthored some of the field's seminal textbooks: Golosa: An Introduction to Russian, now in its sixth edition (with Karen Evans-Romaine and Galina Shatalina), Political Russian, also in its sixth edition (with Natasha Simes), On the Air (also with Natasha Simes), and Russian Listening Comprehension.

Steven J. Sacco, Sacco Global Consulting
Steven J. Sacco is the former CIBER co-director at San Diego State University. Formally trained in quantitative and qualitative research, he has incorporated both research methods in studying language learning in academic, corporate, and military settings. These include Duke University, Archer Daniels Midland, Hewlett-Packard, The UN World Food Programme, the Defense Language Institute, and the U.S. Navy SEALs.

Amanda Sheffer, The Catholic University of America
Amanda Sheffer is a Clinical Associate Professor of German and the German Advisor in the Department of Modern Languages at Catholic University. She is the 2017 recipient of the national American Association of Teachers of German (AATG) FL-A-CH award for contributions in research and teaching of Austria, Switzerland, Liechtenstein and South Tyrol and currently sits on the AATG FL-A-CH SIG board.

Hei Sook Yoo, George Mason University
Hei Sook Yoo is an adjunct professor at George Mason University. She has been teaching Business Korean for over 12 years and received a grant for the CIBER Business Language Research and Teaching Award funded by the US Department of Education in 2019. Her current related research interests lie in developing language curricula for digital literacy using educational technology online and in hybrid environments.